Point V:1. State of the art:

A rolling fluid machine as used in the hydraulic motor disclosed in WO99/61790 comprising a rolling rotor for rolling and swinging.

2. Object:

The rolling fluid machine is intended to be used as a motor and as a spraying device. Thereby, the aim of the invention is to enable to choose which portion of the energy supplied to the rolling fluid machine will be transferred to mechanical energy and which portion of said energy will be transformed to kinetic energy of the liquid flow at the outlet.

3. Solution:

An additional channel interconnects the space before the rotor with the space after the rotor. This additional channel permits the passage of fluid which substantially keeps its kinetic energy for the spraying device.
Such an additional channel is neither known from nor suggested by the relevant state of the art.
